THE latest porcelain artworks by renowned Shanghai painter Yu Xiaofu are on display at the North Hongqiao Art Museum in Jiading.

The exhibition features 20 porcelain plates and 38 porcelain vases.

The highlight of this series of artworks lies in the combination of painting and porcelain craftsmanship.

Yu created anthropomorphic dragons in Shanghai style on the pieces, with their bodies and facial expressions resembling those of humans. Some dragons are depicted contemplating with sheet music in hand, some playing the saxophone, and some leisurely riding bicycles.

His inspiration came from his previous work, which he serialized in the Xinmin Evening News, a popular newspaper in Shanghai, more than a decade ago.

"I always reminisce about the days when I contributed to that newspaper column, missing the cartoon characters I created," he said.

"As this year is the Year of the Dragon, I want to incorporate the element of dragon into them."

After Yu finished painting on the porcelain pieces, Hong Jinsong, a skilled craftsman from Jingdezhen, known as the "porcelain capital" of China, with more than 30 years of experience, glazed them with a thick layer to enhance their durability.

Then, the pieces were fired by Zhang Wenliang, a porcelain master boasting over 40 years of expertise. To achieve optimal coloring effects, he constantly adjusted the damper to regulate the oxygen intake, keeping a temperature of around 1,300 degrees Celsius in the kiln.

After a full 12 hours of firing, the porcelain works with a smooth glaze and delicate texture can be unloaded from the kiln.

THE "Dragon Soaring Across the Seas" exhibition, featuring intangible cultural heritage creative works, is being held in Jiading to celebrate the Year of the Dragon.

The event is jointly organized by the Jiading Cultural Center and the intangible cultural heritage office of the district.

The exhibition showcases various national, municipal and district-level intangible cultural heritage items, including Jiading bamboo carving and Anting yaoban cloth (also called the blue-and-white cloth).

Apart from creations by inheritors of intangible cultural heritage and traditional artists, there are also distinctive pieces crafted by ordinary residents, highlighting their skill and innovation.

There is a handcrafted beaded dragon-shaped ornament, a dragon toy made from yaoban cloth, and a plate adorned with a Shanghai-style dragon pattern.

The diversity of the dragon element attracted many visitors.

"Seeing such a diverse collection of intangible cultural heritage works related to the dragons all at once, I strongly feel a festive mood for the Year of the Dragon," said a visitor
